Traditional track structure. Notwithstanding modern technical developments, the overwhelmingly dominant track form worldwide consists of flat-bottom steel rails supported on timber or pre-stressed concrete sleepers, which are themselves laid on crushed stone ballast.. Most railroads with heavy traffic utilize continuously welded rails supported by sleepers attached via base plates that spread ...

Between 1840 and 1880 the iron industry experienced profound technological changes, including a shift in fuel from charcoal to anthracite coal and then to bituminous coal and coke. During the 1840s and 1850s furnaces fueled by anthracite superseded charcoal furnaces, and rolling mills replaced forges. By the 1870s furnaces fired with bituminous coal and coke supplanted anthracite furnaces.

As the 1890's dawned, railroads were riding a great wave of euphoria. The industry had witnessed more than 70,000 miles of new construction in the 1880's, trains were the undisputed leader in transportation (which drove an economic explosion), rail barons became increasingly richer, and it appeared nothing would slow America's largest industry.
